

The Dirt

Digging up the truth to keep your hands clean!

What half ogress professional from the Guilded Cage and member of the Dymoran church was seen leaving a certain halfling bard's residence well after the time good citizens are asleep? What do her other suitors think of this dalliance with a halfling?

Have you seen the meteor in the southern sky? How could you miss it? According to a well-placed source, several of the local clergy and nobles are worried about what it may bring and are looking for ways to escape the city quickly, without magic. What does this mean for the average person? Once again it will be the average person left to bear the worst of the potential disaster.

According to one of our informants, the servants from the former House Pelligari walked out of the place with more than their ending wages. Some family heirlooms now grace the shelves of the Commoners District's residents.

When is a wizard not a wizard? When LoTS is involved. It seems that a well-known member of the Diamond Legion has been spending long hours at LoTS in the special training areas that is reserved for wizards only. Not even sorcerers are allowed in there, yet this sword swinger is in there for hours without supervision. What is he up to and why can he get the rules bent when others more qualified can't?

Is it just us or do you also wonder why there is so much bureaucracy involved in getting into the Amthydorian library? What is being hidden in there? Are they trying to keep the common folk of the Protectorate ignorant? What can we do to make the powers that be realize that all citizens have rights, not just ones with large amounts of money?
